| TOPIC |
| This article provides a list of Internet service providers in the U.S. and Canada. |
| DISCUSSION |
| Internet Service Common Terms |

Below are some terms and definitions to common Internet terms and connection methods:

• Shell

Offers a basic connection running on top of an UNIX environment. Services include eletronic mail, Usenet news, FTP, telnet, gopher, IRC, and so on. Most providers have a menu-driven interface as well.

UUCP

Offers a method for computers to transfer files from machine to machine without user intervention.

• SLIP

Allows computers to be temporarily connected the Internet. You can run services such as FTP and telnet directly from a computer. This also allows you to run some of the popular graphical user interface software (such as Mosaic and other World Wide Web clients).

• PPP

Similar to SLIP but a much better protocol.

FTP

Offers anonymous FTP space.

T₁AN

This is for connecting a local area network to the Internet.

WWW

Offers space for maintaining Web pages.

• ISDN

High-speed network connections that are offered as dial-up access via digital modems.

• 56-T1

These cover the 56K through T3 speeds. These are dedicated line connections that are high-speed and high-bandwidth.

Internet Service Providers

Internet Service Providers in your local area connect you to an Internet account through a regular phone line. If you choose a local company, you will save money on the long distance charges. This list is not complete, and should not be considered a recommendation from Apple Computer. It is provided for your reference. For a more complete listing, refer to the InterNIC (info@internic.net), PDIAL or Nixpub lists available on ZiffNet/Mac or other online services.
