Macintosh System Software 6.0.2: Labeled Incorrectly As 6.0.1

This article last reviewed: 17 October 1988

Since the end of September 1988, the Macintosh has been shipping with system software 6.0.2 labelled as version 6.0.1. These incorrectly labelled floppy disks are accompanied by an errata sheet to alert users of the discrepancy. Apple apologizes for the confusion, but a label change at this late date would have caused an excessive delay in shipping out the latest system software.

In summary, system software 6.0.1 was not and is not being shipped to customers, regardless of what appears on any labels.
